

Recipe for the Perfect Horror Movie

What you will need:

- 2 Cups of naïve people that lack common sense
- 1 Creepy house
- 1 Dark, eerie forest
- A dash of pop-ups
- 6 Cups of fear
- 1 ½ Tablespoons of spine-chilling music
- 3 Tablespoons of bad choices
- 1 Possessed child (optional)
- ¾ Cup of unfathomable stupidity
- 1 Cup of flickering lights
- ½ Cup of self-opening doors

Directions:

- 1) Pre-heat your creepy house in the dark, eerie forest. Make sure that it is set to midnight.
- 2) Slowly start to add in your 2 cups of naïve people into the creepy house. Once all of the people are poured in, start to mix the flickering lights in with the self-opening doors. Set aside for 2 or 3 days to let paranoia sink in.
- 3) Once paranoia really kicks in, slowly add in your ruthless killer. Make sure that you keep the killer hidden, as it will intensify the flavor of your movie. For added taste, add the spine-chilling music whenever the killer is present. At this point, you should add 2 cups of fear to start off with.
- 4) Once your killer has been established, make it possess one of the children in the household. This of course is optional, but who doesn't love a good possession. Add in another 2 cups of fear while you are at it.
- 5) Once that settles, begin to mix your bad choices and unfathomable stupidity into a separate bowl. Mix well, making sure that there are no lumps. Set aside for use later when the killer attacks.
- 6) Once the killer has attacked, add the bowl that you set aside earlier along with the last 2 cups of fear. It should make for an interesting outcome. You'll know that it is done when almost all of the characters don't make it out alive.
- 7) Lastly add a dash of pop-ups on the top, this adds some extra flare to your horror movie. You don't want it to end up bland.
- 8) Now you have your perfect horror movie with no storyline whatsoever!

For best results, serve at three in the morning in pure darkness with no one else around*
